

Members Respond to the Coronavirus Challenge

Week of 22 June 2020

Alberto Laris,
Partner,
GAYA Construcciones,
Mexico City, Mexico

What's the biggest work/COVID-19 challenge you're facing this week?

Bringing our employees and coworkers (meaning subcontractors and suppliers) back to work on site; making them understand that the threat is more than real and that all safety and health protocols are not only necessary but essential and not complying with them is life threatening.

What's the current situation in your city relative to opening non-essential businesses?

The authorities have come up with a "stoplight" type of system which is not very easy to understand, but is somehow being forced into everybody's daily life; the truth is that not very many respect it and there is more activity than should be permitted.

How do you think COVID-19 will bring about permanent changes in corporate real estate and workplace strategy?

For sure Corporations are going to change the way they work on a daily basis, I believe they will allow for much more remote work, they will "pump up" digital infrastructure in people's homes and open up "alternative or satellite" places for people to work at without commuting or long distance displacement which is a health threat to the employee.

More attention will be brought upon both Physical and Mental Health for the employee, as well as safer and better corporate facilities, where needed.

A good deep look into base building infrastructure will take place, with a lot of upgrading and more care for the environment will become a norm now in Mexico.